Chronicles of the Commonwealth

Living History: Chronicles of the Commonwealth is a 60-minute production that begins 12,000 years ago with Kentucky's first inhabitants and travels through the 21st century, using Primary Source Documents to bring to life moments from Kentucky history. By focusing on their involvement in their changing society, it allows us to draw connections between the Kentucky citizens of the past and how their actions crafted the world in which we live today.

How can we both make this be the most efficient and successful performance?

- We ask that you create an environment conducive to a positive interaction with your students including an open space for our Artist Educators to perform and seating students on bleachers or to where they can easily see the performance.
- For your use, we have provided these activities for both pre- and post-workshop discussion. They are a fun and an engaging way to enhance learning and allow students to make the most of their arts experience with us.
- It is of utmost importance not only to your students but to our Artist Educators as well that there are adult school staff members present in the room throughout the workshop. Students tend to have less distractions and are more encouraged to participate in the workshop with familiar adult presences in the room.

Kentucky's History: The Importance of our Commonwealth

The Falls of the Ohio

The Appalachian Mountains

The Natural Bridge

“United we stand, divided we fall”

From the famous fields of bluegrass to the mountain ranges that surround the Cumberland Gap, the Commonwealth of Kentucky is rich with not only natural treasures but with treasured impacts in our Nation's history. The name alone, Commonwealth, instead of being referred to as a state is only true of 3 other states in America: Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Massachusetts.

This distinction is defined as a term which refers to territories which are occupied and controlled by the government of a certain nation such as those that comprise the United States of America. There is no legal difference between a Commonwealth and a state. For Kentucky's history, it is simply a reminder that its citizens were on the forefront of the declaration of America's independence from England.

In fact, Kentucky's past is filled with historical figures and events that paved the way for the expansion, formation, and universal change of our country. With such inspirational examples of social change in Kentucky, we all have amazing chances to explore change in education, sustainability, and more. We have the foundation of living in this amazing Commonwealth to start us down the path of making history!

Activities for Exploration

In this Study Guide, we will focus on three Activities: Perspective Tableaus, Conflict Resolution Tableaus, and Argumentative Monologues. These activities engage students on multiple levels – a good wake up call for all types of learners. There is no fear of right or wrong answers and no anxiety about competing which increases student motivation! The purpose is to start a dialogue- student inquiries should lead to their own discoveries.

Kentucky History: From Mammoths to Mammoth Cave

Kentucky's Beginnings

During some of Kentucky's earliest periods, it was covered by a warm shallow sea as well as a large reef system formed at what is now the Falls of the Ohio. As the waters receded, swamps dotted the landscape. Ice Age Kentucky was home to bison, elk, mammoths, and mastodons. The fossils of which were discovered by Native Americans at Big Bone Lick.

Paleo-Indian

The land of the Commonwealth was first inhabited by Native Americans in prehistoric times that numbered in the thousands as documented by 17th century French explorers. By the time that the first settlers such as Daniel Boone made their way into Kentucky, there were little to no permanent Native American settlements because they used the territory mainly for hunting grounds. The tribes that frequented Kentucky included the Shawnee, Cherokee, and Iroquois.

Mammoth Cave

Geologists estimate that the oldest part of Mammoth Cave began forming around 10 million years ago. However, Native Americans first discovered entrances to Mammoth Cave only about 4,000 years ago. With more than 390 miles of cave passageways, this is the longest cave in the world. Mammoth Cave not only serves as a National Park for over 2 million tourists annually, it also has served in ancient times as a means of shelter, exploration, and mineral mining,

Activity – Perspective Tableaus

- 1) Start with a historical photograph or painting, preferably with a variety of characters. (i.e. Daniel Boone’s expedition)
- 2) Ask students: What do you see? Who are these people? What are they wearing? What does that tell us about them? Where is the focus of the piece? What does that tell us about it?
- 3) If students do not get to identification on their own, then you can identify the characters and situation in the picture for them. (Historical figures, Native Americans, etc.)
- 4) This is a good time to review the historical background of this event – what time period was this? What do we know about that time period? What were the historical perspectives being formed during this time? (Boone’s expeditions into Kentucky occurred in the 1700s but the painting wasn’t created until the 1850s. How can this alter the perspective of the painting? At this time in history of the painting, two historical perspectives you might have found would have been descendants of Native Americans who once lived on this land versus descendants of settlers who now live in Kentucky.)
- 5) Have volunteer students come to the front of the classroom and re-enact the painting or photograph. Each student will choose a character and mimic their still expression, pose, and placement – eventually recreating the entire picture.
- 6) Ask the students to think about the character they’ve chosen and what their perspective would be about the situation at hand (How would a Native American see this depiction of traveling settlers? How would it feel to be one of those settlers as they enter unknown territory? Would they consider this land as theirs or land that they took from someone else?)
- 7) After the students have thought about their character’s perspective, the teacher will – one by one – tap on the shoulder each student in the tableau. When the student is tapped, they will say out loud one emotion they think they’re character is feeling. The teacher may ask, “Why is your character feeling that way?”
- 8) The teacher will then go around the tableaus and tap each student on the shoulder a second time. This time, the student must respond with a phrase of dialogue they’re character would think or say. Once again, the teacher may ask, “Why would your character say these things?”
- 9) The activity may be repeated as many times as needed, with different paintings/photographs or the same. Students may be rotated out until everyone has a chance.

Explorers of Kentucky: Boone, Clark, & Lewis

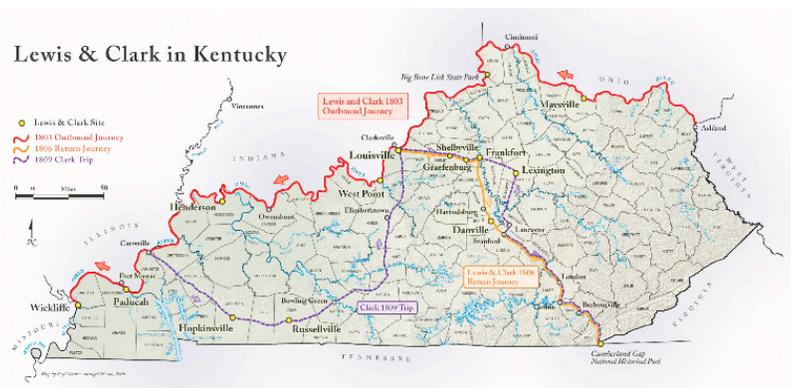

Daniel Boone

A well-known explorer and trail-blazer, Daniel Boone serves as a key figure in the Commonwealth's first explorations and establishment. It was in 1767 that Boone first stepped foot in Kentucky and a few years later that he began to explore the plentiful and beautiful land that he found there. On June 7 of 1769, Boone and a few frontiersmen traveling with him made it through the Cumberland Gap, which intersects Virginia, Kentucky, and Tennessee in the Appalachian Mountains. The men made it as far west as the Falls of the Ohio River near modern-day Louisville before heading back to Boone's settlement in North Carolina. He would make many excursions to Kentucky over the years and paved the way for many settlers to enter Kentucky to live.

Lewis & Clark

Their famous expedition in the early 1800s into the West boasted half the members being Kentuckians or having Kentucky ties. Natural landmarks such as Big Bone Lick and the Falls of the Ohio served as great destinations for these two icons to meet and discover the secrets of the past waiting on Kentucky's soil. Some 1,000 miles of Lewis and Clark's eastern trail are in Kentucky. Kentucky's settlements, farmers, produce, navigators, rivers, and goods all contributed to the success expedition of Lewis & Clark that forever changed the future of our country.

Activity – Argumentative Monologues

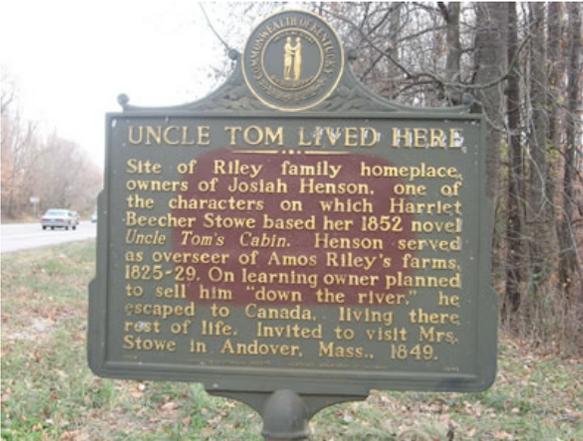

Note: These are great as an end-of-class assessment or use a class performance as an end-of-the-week reward!

- 1) Pick a historical topic you have previously discussed in class. (I.E. Abolition)
- 2) Make a list on the board off all the perspectives involved in this topic. (President Abraham Lincoln, soldier in the Union army, soldier in the Confederate army, freed slave, etc.)
- 3) Assign each student a perspective.
- 4) The students must write a 5+ sentence monologue (like a speech or a story) from that character’s perspective. In that monologue, they should focus on answering these questions: “What is your character doing or where is your character? What is your character afraid of? What does your character want to happen?” These questions give the monologue a complete arc: context, conflict, and resolution.
- 5) All students should hand the monologues in. You can either use them as written assessments or have the students get up and perform/read them out loud.
- 6) Collecting all the monologues and then handing them out to a student who did not write the monologue. The students should then read the monologue, become familiar with it, find a way to empathize with it, and then read it out loud in front of the class. You can use the performance as an opportunity to juxtapose two related perspectives such as having a Union soldier perform right after a Confederate soldier.

Kentucky's (Dual) Role in the Civil War

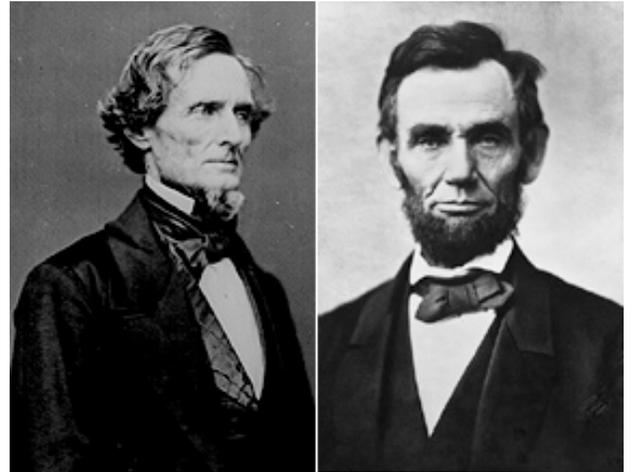

Slavery

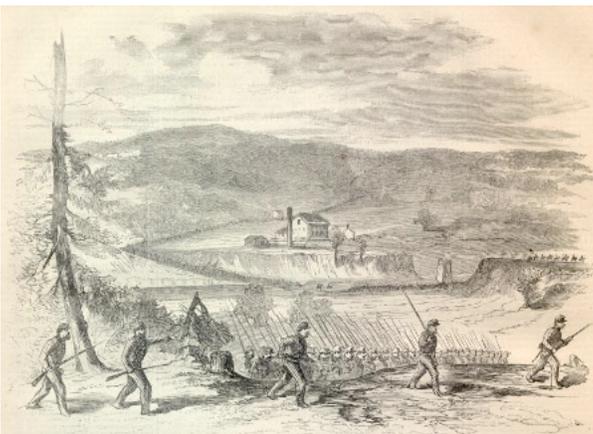

Throughout Kentucky's history as simply a territory and into almost 40 years of its statehood, the population of Kentucky grew to 24 percent of all Kentuckians. By 1860, Kentucky had the third highest total of slave owners in the country behind Virginia and Georgia. One of the most famous novels about slavery in our county, Uncle Tom's Cabin by Harriet Beecher Stowe, was based on a slave from Kentucky that escaped from his owner's home in Kentucky to freedom in Canada.

North vs. South

Kentucky became the perfect definition of the phrase "between a rock and a hard place" in the Civil War. As a border state between three slave states and three free states, Kentucky and its citizens were torn economically, geographically, politically, and most of all, ideologically between North and South. In a strategic move to avoid seceding from the Union, Kentucky's Governor in 1861 declared that the Commonwealth would remain neutral in the Civil War. The citizens of Kentucky were not so neutral in their actions and formed factions of organized militias to support their chosen side. Those that were Confederate sympathizers called themselves the State Guards, and those that were for the Union became known as the Home Guards.

Brother vs. Brother

Hundreds of families across the Commonwealth had divided families where brother fought brother on the battlefield. It was extremely common for a family to have sons in the war representing the North and the South. Even President Lincoln was affected by Kentucky's torn loyalties and he was often criticized by the press for having relatives in Kentucky that were Confederate sympathizers.

Activity – Conflict Resolution Tableaus

- 1) Provide a historical conflict topic that you previously discussed in class. (I.E. Slavery)
- 2) Tell the class their goal is to represent that topic by creating a still picture with their bodies.
- 3) Designate one person as the “sculptor.” Using however many classmates you want, the sculptor must create a physical image that represents the given topic. The sculptor silently directs them where to go, how to stand, what expression to have, and the sculptees must respond accordingly.
- 4) Once the sculpture has been created, the rest of the class discusses the image. “What characters do you see? What historical perspectives are shown? How does this image represent the topic?”
- 5) After discussion, the teacher poses a question: “How can we make this image a stronger representation of (the topic)?” If any student has a suggestion for making the image stronger, then the teacher appoints them as the new sculptor who modifies the image, adding, subtracting, or moving sculptees.
- 6) Discuss the new image. What changed? How did this make the image stronger? Keep making adjustments until the class is satisfied with the image as a representation of the topic.
- 7) When the classroom is satisfied with the image, the teacher proposes a new goal of modifying the current image until you have shown how to fix the CONFLICT shown in the topic.
- 8) Repeat steps 5 – 7. Can we make this image of conflict resolution even stronger? Arrive at an agreed upon image of resolution.

This activity can be completed with a number of topics! For example:

Note: This activity is also a great way to get the students to talk about conflicts in their own lives. Ask:
“What makes you feel small or insignificant? Represent that situation.”
“Is there something you’ve seen in the school that is unfair? Represent that situation.”
